FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

LawBase Now Delivers Enhanced Exchange Integration

Enhancement allows for increased mobile functionality and greater efficiency

January 10, 2013 – Synaptec Software, Inc. – the developer of LawBase, the leading case and matter management system designed to increase productivity – announces enhanced integration with Microsoft Exchange. Now, LawBase users can originate calendar items using their Outlook calendars and those appointments will flow back into their LawBase calendar, including calendar events created on a smartphone.

LawBase has long had a bi-directional calendar integration where calendar items initiated in LawBase sync to Exchange, saving users the trouble of duplicate calendar entries in both the LawBase and Outlook calendars. Those entries can be edited in Outlook, and the changes will flow back into the LawBase calendar. This is incredibly advantageous for users because many calendar appointments generated in LawBase are created by LawBase’s automated workflow, meaning they automatically appear in both LawBase and Outlook calendars without the need for duplicate manual entry.

The enhanced integration now allows for changes to events in Outlook calendars, and also increases the ease of calendar item entry for users when they are away from their computers. Appointments generated via smartphones flow back, by way of Exchange, to that user’s LawBase calendar.

“Legal professionals now rely on smartphones to replicate much of the functionality of their PC. Being able to add LawBase calendar entries from Outlook on a mobile device, such as a smartphone or an iPad, will decrease duplicate entry and save time while also ensuring that no appointment is overlooked,” says Synaptec Software President Phil Homburger. “This added functionality makes the optional Exchange integration even more intuitive and efficient for lawyers and staff who rely on Outlook for email and calendaring.”

The enhancement is part of the popular Outlook/Exchange integration with LawBase and will be available immediately to all clients.
