

What future technologies should law firms and corporate legal departments expect to incorporate into business operations?

Virtual Reality

With rapid advancements in technology, a development that could produce very intriguing applications for law firms is the utilization of virtual reality in business operations. Imagine viewing real-world images of accident scenes or live playback of testimony accessed instantly. Think about inspecting evidence without having to physically handle or disturb it. The opportunities to productively use this technology, both inside and outside the courtroom, abound.
